Mechanical and Rigging

2 volvo penta 500 cv in total seacocks all new

The engines have total 1,600 hours, just 80 hours since they were repaired. The repair was carried out by the Volvo technical service after having the boat stopped for a little over 2 years, and consisted of removing the engines from the boat, completely disassembling them to recondition the entire compression system, and checking and cleaning the coolers. All the necessary parts were changed as well as new bottom keys, and the engine room was painted and cleaned up. It has a sewage tank installed with an emptying pump and an exit point, according to regulations, on the starboard side, although everything is new because the port where the ship is located does not provide that service. The emptying system is with a pump.

As I have continued using it, this week they are dismantling the turbos and getting them ready. Otherwise, all electrical and mechanical systems are operational. All bilge and greywater pumps are working properly including those in the sewage tank.
